Wisconsin Extra Leaf Quarter

Submitted by: Rich P.

In 2004, several coins of the state quarter series were printed with a misprint on the design for the Wisconsin coin. These coins featured an extra leaf on the left side of the corn cob on the coin. These coins become particularly valuable, often selling for several hundred dollars on sites such as Ebay.

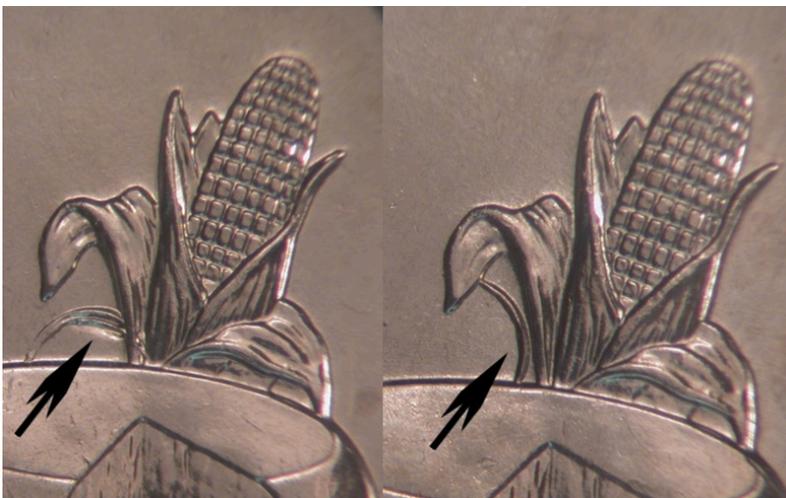

Some Wisconsin quarter errors were found with an "extra cornstalk leaf" – either pointing down ("Low Leaf") or pointing up ("High Leaf"). The normal cause would be metal shavings accidentally lodged in the die, creating a gouge from the coin striking action. These were found notably in the Tucson area.

The cause for the error is not clear, but experts have ideas. Some believed the raised features next to the ear of corn were the result of curved metal shavings becoming accidentally lodged in the coin die, which eventually got pounded into the die itself by the coin striking action, leaving a gouge in the die. As more coins were struck by the same die, coin metal flowed into the gouged area, giving the coin an appearance of another leaf.

Evidence for this includes the fact that these “leaves” fall far short of proper design definition, are awkwardly placed, and lack proper definition.

There is also speculation that the leaf was not a mistake, but an Easter egg, since the chances of a chipping that coincidentally had the shape of a leaf occurring right next to the corn cob have been deemed highly unlikely.

These coins became very well known, with sales of sometimes over 500 U.S. dollars taking place regularly.

FUN FACT

The Nickel

The nickel wasn't always a nickel – or made of nickel.

The original 5 cent coins were called half-dimes and were made of silver.

The small thin coins were hard to use and easily counterfeited and were replaced by a copper-nickel coin in 1873. The nickels name is unique as it's the only U.S. coin that is called by its metal content – even though the metal alloy in a nickel is only 25 percent nickel. The rest is copper. The bison that appears on the buffalo nickel lived in New York City around the turn of the century. His name was Black Diamond, and his official home was at the Bronx Zoo. Many coins are worth millions, and 1913 Liberty Head nickels have sold for as much as $5 million. All U. S. coins are dictated by Federal Law to include two mottos: “In God We Trust” and “E Pluribus Unum”. Key dates for nickels include: 1885, 1894, 1912, 1939, 1942-1945, and 1950. In 1937-D a 3-legged Buffalo Nickel variety resulted from over-zealous polishing of a worn reverse die. This variety makes it a really cool coin and fun to search for.
